

Capital Letters and Full Stops

Example:

Capital letters and full stops are very important in both reading and writing. Capital letters and full stops help to break up sentences and help us to know when we take a breath in reading. Capital letters have very important jobs too, they help to identify the start of a sentence or tell us important words such as names.

The sentence below starts with a capital letter so that we know a new sentence has begun and it ends with a full stop so that we know the sentence has finished.

The little girl was excited to go to her friend Claire's birthday party.
